presents Teaching Tools:

Best Practices in Mentoring Undergraduate Researchers

Jennifer Van Reet, Associate Professor of Psychology

While mentoring shares some features with teaching and some with advising, it is a distinct practice. Good mentoring can be rewarding for faculty and can be transformative for students, leading to a wide variety of positive outcomes. But, what is good mentoring? How can faculty ensure they are giving students a valuable experience? In this presentation, Jennifer Van Reet, chair of PC's Undergraduate Research Committee, will share some notable findings related to mentoring and give some evidence-based tips on how to mentor undergraduate research assistants and independent study students.
